Our first show for 2009 The Mosman Village Festival of Sculpture 9 March to 3rd April.

Now in its 4th year, the show has always been a huge success, so start sculpting now!

For those new to the Society, this exhibition is organised by the Mosman Village Retailers Association in conjunction with the Society. Work is displayed in windows and prominent positions within some 70 shops in Mosman Village Shopping precinct (Military Road and adjoining streets).

As well as a very good opportunity for sales and exposure, there are 3 prizes for the show: 1st prize - $1,000, 2nd prize - $600, and 3rd prize - $400.

It is of utmost importance to supply us with very clear photographs of your work with good contrast and an uncluttered background. Last year, photos were loaded onto the Mosman Village Retailers website. Poor photos will not be used; it may also mean that your work is rejected for the exhibition.

Our judge this year is Nick Vickers who has extensive experience in the arts. Some of his roles have included: director of the Sir Hermann Black Gallery & Sculpture Terrace, University of Sydney, and curator and judge for the Blake Prize. Currently, he is part-time convenor of the Society of the Arts at Trinity Grammar School (the Delmar Gallery).

Some important dates to note (also see back page):

Information you need to know to protect your sculptures with copyright

As artists we are all aware that when we create a work we also become entitled to certain rights over that work, commonly referred to as copyright. While we may know this, very few understand precisely what copyright is, and how to protect our works with copyright. When we sell a work, it is rare that we intend to sell the right to copy that work.

Gibson Owen, sculptor and lawyer has given us the benefit of his professional experience with information we all should know regarding how to protect our works with copyright...

Copyright is a bundle of rights and not a physical thing. The ideas expressed in writing, painting and sculpture must be capable of being rendered in a material form.

When we sell our works we are not selling the copyrights but granting a very limited license to own, sell, possess and probably a limited right to display in public with due attribution.

To protect our copyrights we must be in a position to prove; expressly or by presumption authorship, and that the work is original and not a copy or version of an earlier work of someone else. Two people can own copyright in identical works if they both created and arrived at the same work without copying the other's work.

Many artists forget when a work was completed and when confronted with a fraudulent copy may fail to prove the date of creation. In this case, the pretender may assert an earlier date and thereby succeed in claiming to be the first and original author, and the real artist to be the flagrant copiest.

It is preferable to be in a position to prove by express claims: originality, authorship and the date of creation.

Evidence of this can be achieved by placing on the work: the copyright logo ©, name of the author and the date of completion, as this will give rise to the legal presumptions of the existence of copyright and its ownership by you.

© Gibson Owen Dec 2008

The law does not require you to do this, and not many legal cases arise in relation to sculptures but the dangers are present, so why not be proud and safe.

These marks need not be in an obvious place and their existence on, or under the base is adequate.

In looking at sculpture, the artist could use an electric engraver to indelibly inscribe the details above. If that is not a choice then a water proof label should be permanently glued to the base. However, the electric engraver is by far the best tool.

In Australia (in contrast to the USA and other countries) there is no system of registration for the protection of copyright works and it remains with the author/artist to guard his own work by express claims as mentioned above.

It is essential to remember that ideas are not protected by copyright and the expression of the ideas must be manifested in a material form. Ideas are protected in the realm of patents but very few sculptures are protectable with patents because they lack utility.

Sculpture in the Desert

A unique sculpture experience embedded in an unforgettable walking adventure

Aug 28th – 5th Sept '09

Journey with Into the Blue Creative Walks and Wendy Black and Michael Christie from TBSSS. Be inspired by the form, space and texture of the beautiful Larapinta Trail in the MacDonnell Ranges.

The itinerary includes visiting two Indigenous communities that seek to inform your understanding and perception of the country.

This journey will challenge and extend individual sculptural expression and provide ideas to create a work derived from this desert experience. For more information visit our website.

Several of our members last October were fortunate to visit Bert Flugelman's studio at his home in Burradoo

On Sunday, 19th October last year, Bert Flugelman AM opened his home studio to members of The Sculptors Society. Bert Flugelman is famous for many sculptures, among these is 'Cones' (1982) a commissioned work situated in the Sculpture Garden at the National Gallery, Canberra.

Bert Flugelman has also a distinguished teaching career having taught art at many institutions including: the National Art School in Darlinghurst, where he himself had once been a student; and the School of Creative Arts, University of Wollongong. He was made a Professorial Fellow at the University of Wollongong in 1991, and a Doctorate of Creative Art (Honoris Causa) in 1995.

Eva Chant was among those sculptors fortunate to visit Bert at his home in Burradoo and has shared her experience with us...

Bert has been an active member of The Sculptors Society for many decades. Bert and his wife Rosemary live on a beautiful acreage in Burradoo. After our initial warm welcome, Bert gave us some insight into the experiences of his life, beginning with his birth in Vienna in 1923, his migration to Australia in 1938 and his travels around the world. Over the years he has enjoyed teaching art to students and feels he gained as much from this experience as he gave in teaching.

Next our group ventured out beyond the house to view his large sculptures; these were constructed mainly of polished stainless steel and welded metal, and were quite spectacular to view against the backdrop of shrubs, trees and lush, well maintained lawns. (fig. 2 and 3)

After this, we were shown into the large working shed. This large, practical building comprised several rooms, designed specifically to create a good working environment. One room contained the tools and equipment needed to work sheet metal. The adjoining rooms were a combination of storage and display studios, where visitors could see a lifetime of ideas and works in progress hung on the walls and displayed on plinths ready for a future exhibition.

The middle section of the shed was quite a large room, with wonderful natural light from skylights and huge opened shed doors. Around the walls hung a variety of art pieces made from assorted fragments mounted on wood (fig.1). These witty reflections of life seemed each to tell a story. The materials ranged from horns, bones, sea shells, coral, bits of machinery, fur, mirrors, keys, furniture mouldings and wine glass, etc. Displayed around the floor were tall totemic wooden sculptures, anthropomorphised from tree trunks into human figures (fig. 5); it was difficult to resist touching these sculptures.

Finally, we were all invited back to the house for refreshments and to view the private studio attached to the back of the house where Bert does most of his creative thinking. It was enthralling to see a large number of recently completed works, marquette and domestic sized, displayed around the room and on a large central table (fig. 4).

At the end of our stay, Jenny Green our President, gave a speech of thanks to Bert and Rosemary for this generous invitation from this very successful and renowned sculptor.

Our Member's News...

This year the works of Ingrid Morley and Blaze Krstanoski-Blazeski, two of our members were selected for 'Sculpture by the Sea'. Many of you will already know both of them.

Ingrid has owned her own Sculpture School in Sydney since its establishment in 1996; she has had many solo shows of her sculptures in both Beijing and Sydney and her work has been selected for Sculpture by the Sea numerous times. In her artists' statement about her sculpture, Ingrid explains that "Mammon is the name given to the demon of materialism", and that her aim was "to personify the disquiet of a 'being' struggling between material conquest and spiritual anorexia.

Blaze Krstanoski-Blazeski was born in Macedonia. He has studied art in both Macedonia and here in Australia; he has a Bachelor of Fine Arts in Sculpture from the National Arts School in Darlinghurst. Blaze

The new Memorial Cenotaph for Penrith in Memory Park (above) was designed and built by Terrance Plowright

The memorial which took over 18 months to construct was unveiled by the Governor of NSW, Marie Bashir on Friday 31st October last year.

The project required: more than 20 tonnes of local sandstone; a major stainless steel sculptural element (the Eternal Flame); 4 cast bronze figures representing the army, navy, air force and nursing; stone tablets; bronze tablets; and 4 cast bronze badges. Terrance has also incorporated networks of programmed LEDs and soft lighting for night. The entire sculptural element was built in Terrance's studio.

The main memorial is over 8 metres wide and 3 metres high, and is about a third of the width of the Park. There are four large naming walls that list all those who served from 1914 to 1918. The memorial also lists nurses from the area who served overseas as well as the young boys from the Penrith area who lost their lives.

Zoe Harrington (above) had a sellout exhibition at the National Art School Gallery 'Honours Show 08'.

Zoe Harrington will graduate her honours year with Distinction in ceramics at the National Arts School (NAS), Darlinghurst.

Her sculptures had completely sold out in the first few hours at the recent National Arts School Gallery annual 'Honours Show 08' which showcased all honours year students work.

Immediately after the show Zoe was invited by John Freeland of the Freeland Gallery, Glenmore Road, Paddington to exhibit at his Gallery later this year.

Book on Bert Flugelman's large and public sculptures by Peter Pinson, recently released by Watermark Press

A book on Bert Flugelman's large and public sculptures was released last November. The book was designed by Harry Williamson, who was also responsible for designing the book on Australian art, "In the Making".

To obtain a copy please contact, Peter Pinson of Peter Pinson Gallery, 143 Edgecliffe Road, Woollahra; telephone: 9369 1919 has had many solo and group exhibitions of his work both here and in Macedonia.

In his artist statement, Blaze says of his sculpture by the sea, that: "the movement of space and time create the energy of the wave."
